Early consent education is crucial to preventing sexual violence, and fostering a culture of consent that can be built upon through middle, high school, and beyond—both inside and outside of the classroom. In spite of this, many consent education tools are designed for older youth, making it difficult to identify quality consent education curriculum and resources for K-5 (kindergarten through grade five) youth.

This toolkit, designed in collaboration with local and statewide organizations, schools, parents, and students, led by MOASH, guides educators, parents, caregivers, and students through choosing appropriate consent-related curriculum and resources for their classrooms, districts, and households.

Inside this toolkit, you'll find:

- Guidance on how to assess for school and community needs for consent education, and how those needs intersect with existing district policy, resources, and curriculum
- Model responses for teachers and staff to commonly asked questions or comments from students, signs to look for when a student is triggered, and supportive responses when a student discloses
- Two sets of standards (K-2 and 3-5) for consent education, complete with corresponding resource pages that include rigorously evaluated and approved curriculum, videos, books, and websites
- A rubric for resource inclusion and scoring, which allows educators, parents, caregivers, and students to evaluate consent education materials not included in this toolkit independently

...and more!

Check out the K-5 Consent Toolkit and more adolescent health resources at MOASH.org